When you're buying sheep:

How to avoid the risk of introducing resistant worms into your flock

When you buy

- ❖ Lambs and yearlings are most at risk, and shed more eggs onto pasture than mature sheep
- ❖ It takes many weeks of exposure to larvae for animals to develop an immune response
- ❖ Ask: is this animal pasture or barn raised?
 - Pasture raised: was it treated? When, and how often? With which wormer?
 - Quarantine and treat when you bring it home before sending it out into the field
 - Barn raised: was it never on pasture? Will you be pasturing it?
 - Barn raised lambs will still be susceptible as yearlings next spring if it is their first pasture season
 - Monitor frequently while on pasture over the first pasture season

C. Fullerton

G. Jones

Coming home

- ❖ Quarantine and treat before turning out
 - Keep off pasture (barn or dry lot) for at least 48 hours
 - Treat with two different classes of wormer at the recommended dose
 - Turn out onto wormy pasture, to dilute any remaining eggs with 'local' farm worms

Every farm is different: work with your veterinarian to come up with your best strategy
